SUBJECT ALPHABET

NOTE ON SUBJECT-ENTRIES

Subject entries.—The subject alphabet, though in one respect a topical index to the first (author-and-title) alphabet, is nevertheless complete in itself and can be bound, if desired, as a separate volume for independent use. Novels, juveniles, plays, and poems (excepting anthologies) are not repeated here, except those to be used as text-books in foreign languages, as the first alphabet, giving them under authors and titles, supplies the entries under which they are sought, and the placing of these large classes in the subject alphabet would interfere seriously with its practical use. Laws and law reports entered under the names of states in the first alphabet, as well as sermons and essays identified only with the names of the authors, are also not repeated in this part. With these exceptions the material of the first alphabet is duplicated in the second alphabet, but arranged on a different plan to answer a different purpose. The object of the present alphabet is to show what books have been issued on any given topic.

The arrangement is by specific subjects, not by general classes. Books upon kindred topics are not grouped under a general heading, but each is placed under the particular subject of which it treats. Thus, histories of the United States will be found under "United States," not under "History;" histories of Massachusetts, under "Massachusetts," not under "United States;" and histories of Boston, under "Boston," not under "Massachusetts." Lives of individuals are in like manner placed under their names, and not under "Biography;" treatises upon the different metals under the name of each metal, and not under "Metals." Only universal histories, collected works, biographies, general works upon science, etc., are entered under "History," "Biography," "Science," etc. When a title relates to a subject and also to a place, though often entered under both, preference is given to the subject, as "Nehrling, H. North American birds," will be found under "Birds," rather than under "North America." For this reason, for subdivisions not found under "America," "North America," "United States," etc., turn to the general subject. References are freely made from the general to the special; but as a rule they are not considered necessary from the special to the general. References are also made to nearly-related subjects, and from the synonyms of the adopted headings. There are many cases of books with obscure, ambiguous, or meaningless titles, in which it has been impossible, in the absence of the books themselves, to determine with certainty their specific subjects; these have been placed under general subjects, when the general subjects were evident. The user of the subject alphabet should remember that by reference to a more general heading he will often find what might otherwise escape him on the specific subject or kindred topics. In most cases books have been placed under one specific subject heading, and cross-references have been made from the synonyms. In a few cases, however, there will be found entries under practically synonymous headings, following the word used in the title of the book: "Church-music," "Hymns," etc., furnish a case in point.

In searching for books on specific subjects, the extended catalogue of Bibliographic Aids, prepared by Mr. Leypoldt personally, as a preface to the subject volume of the original "American Catalogue" (1876), is still of the greatest value, and should be consulted by the student. The numerous bibliographies of special subjects, now forming so extended a literature of their own, should also be utilized.
